Dedication

With pride in their valor and the nobility of their service,
This History
is dedicated by their surviving comrades, to the memory of the Patriot "All Americans", officers and men, of the 328th Infantry, 82nd Division, who gave their lives in France that the right might prevail,
the weak might survive,
Christian civilization might be preserved,
Democracy might triumph
and that
Liberty might not perish from the world.

This picture shows the ruins of one of the buildings in Rambourcourt, France, which had a dugout in it, which was occupied at different times by the men of the regiment. The picture was drawn by Gilbert Strunz, Company D, 328th Inf., who was killed in action on Hill 223, in the Argonne Forest on Oct. 7, 1918. The town of Rambourcourt was being shelled by the Boche when Strunz made this picture.

PREFACE

A comprehensive record of this war, indeed a like history of any movement in it, whether great or small, would resolve itself into a recounting of deeds of individual bravery, of heroism, and of human sacrifice; for no man who has faced the enemy's guns, whether he be private soldier or officer, is less than hero nor does one deserve mention more than the other. But such details of course can not be made. Histories are of a necessity generalities, adorned it is true with such details as occur to the author's mind, but essentially a record of great events and the forces which bring about these events. Yet the average human mind especially where acts of human conflict are concerned, searches for detail. And is it just that this universal craving should go altogether unsatisfied? Since we cannot give the deeds of each man in any movement, nor yet recount the glorious enterprises of our smaller units, we can at least mention the more important achievements of so large a unit as the Regiment and leave the imagination and the individual to supply the details. Such, then, is our purpose in outlining the history of the 328th Infantry.

HISTORY OF THE 328th INFANTRY

CHAPTER I.

"Nations shall make war against nations."

Biblical prophecy has been fulfilled. The twentieth century has witnessed the mightiest struggle for world supremacy. In the past man has sought mastery over man, tribe over tribe, and kingdom over kingdom, but the years from 1914 to 1918 have witnessed nearly the whole of the principal nations of the earth taking sides and uniting in one gigantic struggle. The United States finally became a vital force in this conflict and with the Allies set out to overthrow Prussianism and Autocracy.

In order to become an effective force, the United States had to raise a large army and equip and train it in the shortest possible time. Cantonments were quickly organized and on August 28th, 1917, at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., assembled the nucleus of all the units which went to make the Eighty-Second Division.

The 328th Infantry was organized on August 28 and 29, 1917, with the following field officers:

COL. JULIAN R. LINDSEY,

LIEUT. COL. JOHN W. WRIGHT,

MAJ. RICHARD WETHERILL,

MAJ. E. HAMMOND JOHNSON.

The original line officers of the regiment were chosen from officers commissioned in the Fourth and Eighth Companies, First Officers Training Camp, Fort McPherson, Georgia. Each company was assigned two or three men from Regular Army outfits to assist in training the men. The officers assigned to each company together with these Regulars constituted the companies until September 5th, 1917, on which date the first five per cent. of the Selective Draft for Camp Gordon began to arrive. These men were from the States of Alabama, Georgia and Tennessee. Work now began in earnest along the lines of training and building up a smooth running organization and getting the Regimental area into a fit training ground. New men were arriving daily so that by the middle of October each company had approximately fifty per cent. of its authorized full strength. It is impossible to enumerate the many difficulties which were encountered and overcome during this period due to lack of experience on the part of the officers and men and also lack of equipment; nevertheless, each day showed progress and the transition from civilian to soldier was progressing rapidly. Regimental, Battalion and Company organizations were perfected, schools for N. C. O.'s and also Bakers and Cooks were inaugurated and the "Camp Gordon 1917 Model" rifle in the shape of a five-foot pole was very much in evidence. It was during this time that in some respects our hardest work was done, for this was the period in which we were breaking ourselves of the habits of years of civil life and substituting therefor the requirements of a military organization. In other words, we were learning "discipline."

About the middle of October orders from the War Department brought about the transfer of practically all these men to other camps to fill to full war strength National Guard organizations from their States. By October 20th each company was left only its officers and a nucleus of N. C. O.'s. The previous work was not lost, however, for the experience gained was of great value to those remaining and an efficient organization had been evolved. Very soon a new lot of men began to arrive from various Northern and Eastern camps. These men had had about the same amount of training as the ones which were transferred and soon the companies were going along about as before, except that the difficulties of training were augmented by the fact that a large proportion of the new men were of foreign birth and unable to read English and in a number of cases even speak it, but they were willing and anxious to learn and did so with surprising quickness.

This condition caused to be organized a system of company schools to teach the English language. Also other schools were held for instruction in all phases of military matters, all men being required to attend one of the schools. These schools were held at night during the entire stay at Camp Gordon. Intensive military training was taken up in earnest, particular attention being given to the physical development of the men. Specialty schools were established by the Division in charge of British and French instructors fresh from the fields of battle. Representatives from each company were trained in these schools and soon each company had men capable of instructing in auto rifle, hand grenade, rifle grenade, bayonet, gas defense and sniping. Clothing and equipment was being received and issued daily and soon the percentage of straw hats and tennis shoes at dress parades was on the decline. Saw mills of the camp were rapidly turning out the "new model" Camp Gordon rifle and soon each man was busily occupied in mastering the intricacies of the manual of arms with this bed slat variety of fire arm. Work continued with this makeshift equipment till about the first of February, 1918. Then we were fully equipped with the United States Model 1917 Rifle and Bayonet. Up to this time the bulk of the training had been along the lines of disciplinary exercises, and physical development. These were attained through hours of close order drills, manual of arms and passing in review in the formation known as "Lindsey's Special." Also hours of setting up exercises and on each Friday a hike. Toward the last of our stay this hike was taken in full equipment and lasted about five hours. Saturday was the day of inspections when a cigarette butt in the yard, or a smudge of soot in the kitchen was sufficient grounds to cause all Hell to break loose.

It would be unfair to pass on without mentioning the work done during this period by the Company Supply Officers and Sergeants. We were issued piece-meal every kind of equipment ever used by Infantry and each article had to be kept track of under the most rigid system of property responsibility. In addition we ran an insurance and allotment business which would make the Prudential ashamed of itself and in spare moments sold and bought blocks of Liberty Bonds. With a drill schedule and schools lasting from five-thirty A. M., to seven P. M. it is rather difficult to see just when these side line businesses were operated, but they were.

Ruins of church in Rambucourt, France. Town through which the trenches in front of Mont Sec ran, which were held by the Regiment as its first battle front. This picture was drawn by Gilbert Strunz, Company D, 328th Infantry.

During the entire stay at Camp Gordon the "S. C. D. Board" was kept busy weeding out the lame, halt, blind and mentally deficient which were sent down by the Local Draft Boards, whose ideas apparently were that the Army was a convenient dumping ground for the insane and physically incompetent. As a result of this weeding-out process the men who constituted the Regiment at the time it embarked were selected men in every sense of the word.

It was about the first of February we took up the specialized arms in earnest and got a rather confused idea from the British and French instructors as to the most approved method of winning the war. Up to this time the men thought the war would be won with "I. D. R." and "Singing" while the officers had a hazy idea that some sort of fire arm would be used, but these instructors told us no. The French said the war would be won with chauchots and hand grenades while the British hooted at the idea, and calmly informed us that the bayonet, trench knife and gas mask would suffice. Not to be caught napping, we tried learning all methods, and it was a job, as the French didn't deem it proper to use a grenade unless it was thrown in five counts and the British were horrified at the idea of simply killing a man with the bayonet, maintaining that it was an art to "long thrust" and "withdraw" and the process should be carried out with technique and temperament. This training tended to relegate the rifle to the position of being merely a handle for the bayonet which did not at all conform to the inherent American tendencies regarding this weapon; our own Army instructors still insisting that the Manual of Arms, care of the rifle and position and aiming drills were paramount.

The balance of our stay at Gordon was devoted to intensive practical training in the various uses of our arms and equipment. Elaborate bayonet and grenade courses were quickly constructed and at Norcross, Ga., an enormous rifle range was built. Each day was divided into periods for practice on each course, except the rifle range, which was several miles away and our practice there was for days at a time doing nothing but shooting. Also each battalion was at intervals placed under French engineers and actually dug systems of trenches and built barbed wire entanglements. Five hundred gas masks were issued to the Regiment and instruction given in their care and use and each man was required to pass through the gas house.

Parades and reviews were held weekly, culminating in the Division being reviewed on April 4th, 1918, by Mrs. John B. Gordon, wife of Gen. John B. Gordon, C. S. A., for whom the camp was named. The officer personnel while at Camp Gordon had undergone many changes—some of the original officers being transferred to other branches of the Service and others lost by promotion, while new officers from the Second Training Camp were assigned to the Regiment. Rumors had been rampant for weeks, gradually assuming a more official tone till the middle of April, when the Regimental advance party was ordered to a port of embarkation and then we knew that our time of departure was close at hand.

All drills had been suspended and everything was orderly confusion during the last two weeks of our stay at Gordon. Property was boxed and marked, as per regulations, clothing and equipment issued and stenciled, passenger and baggage lists typed and show down inspections held at all hours of the day and night to determine any shortages. Entraining orders were received and on April 19th, 1918, Headquarters, Machine Gun and Supply Companies left for Camp Upton, followed shortly thereafter by the balance of the Regiment. This move was made in standard Pullmans on a good time schedule, but the soldiers were practicing their inherent privilege of kicking, complaining because they had to sleep two to a berth.

Beginning several days prior to our departure relatives and friends flocked to the Camp in all kinds of conveyances for farewells. Our hike down to the railroad yards at Chamblee, Ga., was made wearing overcoats and heavy woolen underwear and the biggest packs in captivity on a hot April day and with an inner feeling of martyrism, all of which conspired to concoct emotions which still linger in our memories. A motley crew of S. C. D., Depot Brigade men, tear stained wives, mothers, sisters, sweethearts and others of varying relationship, waved us and embraced us till the old troop train pulled out.

This picture shows a trail leading to the crest of Hill No. 260, which was taken by the 2nd Battalion on October 8, 1918. Although covered with snow when the picture was taken, the trees show plainly the shell fire on them.

CHAPTER II.

The trains were given a rousing welcome at every station on our way North, which culminated in a bedlam of noise upon arrival at New York from shouting, blowing whistles and tooting horns. The Regiment arrived at Upton by sections from April 21st to 24th inclusive.

Our time at Upton was spent in more inspections and issuing of articles to complete our overseas equipment. The Quartermaster who devised the overseas equipment list must have thought we were pack mules instead of soldiers. Incidentally, practically all this equipment was dumped on our arrival at Le Havre.

Upton was the camp made famous by A. W. O. L.'s. Our Regiment, both men and officers, were confined to camp till every company was inspected and found to have all equipment called for and for a time it seemed that we would be allowed no time off at all. It will be remembered that a large number of our men were from New York and vicinity and had not been home since the first of October and we had no sooner arrived than whole families besieged the Camp, begging and imploring passes for their friends and relatives. The strain was too much for some who went home any way. Finally, however, passes were granted for 24 and 36 hours, depending on the distance to be traveled. Some very pitiful cases came up where men went home suddenly to find on arrival that their whole family had left the day before for Upton to see them. It is not to be wondered at that a lot of the men did not show up the minute the pass expired and on the afternoon of April 30, we were ordered to entrain for Boston harbor, and roll call still showed a number absent. Practically all these, however, were put on the next transport and joined us shortly after our arrival in France.

The trip to Boston was uneventful except that it is rumored that large quantities of Uncle Sam's coin changed hands to the tune of the craps. We made Boston by daybreak of May 1st and immediately embarked. The 1st Battalion, Headquarters, Machine Gun and Supply Companies were loaded on H. M. S. Grampian and the 2nd and 3rd Battalions on H. M. S. Scandinavian. We got under way about noon and cruised to New York harbor, arriving there in the late afternoon of May 2nd. The convoy was here assembled, consisting of sixteen transports and one cruiser—the San Diego, later sunk—and departed during the afternoon of May 3rd. Say, but didn't it make little chills go up your spine when you watched the old Statue of Liberty begin fading out of view and you realized that we were really leaving? One thought came to all—the speculation of who were the ones who would never see the old Girl again.

The trip across was uneventful. We learned lots though, in that we became intimately acquainted with our life preserver, which at all times must decorate our bosoms, also we learned considerable about British sea rations and crews, and we didn't like either. Our time on board was taken up with physical exercise and boat drills. These boat drills were held at odd times every day and consisted in practicing every one in going to his appointed station or life boat in case an emergency should arise. It was on this trip that we got our first taste of censorship. The budding censors applied the blue pencil copiously to the blood curdling copy destined for the Folks at Home. Tales of subs, torpedoes and fish as big as transports were ruthlessly butchered and incidentally many a censoring officer was sadly disillusioned regarding the place he was till now sure he held in his men's esteem.

It has been constantly circulated that when we were about two days from England a torpedo passed through our convoy, luckily striking nothing.

Early on the morning of May 15th we picked up our destroyer patrol. These efficient little craft certainly add to one's feeling of security in the danger zone. Those who have never seen them work have missed a great deal. They remind one of a bunch of well-trained bird dogs trying to get wind of birds. The ship's officers were old heads at the game and while in the danger zone would not leave their posts. When we arrived at the entrance to Liverpool harbor the tide was out and we were told we would have to wait till morning and go in with the tide. We were also told that this waiting place was a regular ships' graveyard. Nothing unusual happened, however, and we docked at Liverpool on the morning of May 16th and details were at once put to work unloading the ships. The entire day was spent in unloading and it was twilight before the last troops had debarked. The 1st Battalion, Headquarters, Machine Gun and Supply Companies marched direct to the station and entrained for Southampton, while the 2nd and 3rd Battalions went to Knotty Ash Rest Camp, on the outskirts of Liverpool. The sensation of again marching on land was a good one, after our long sea voyage and the rousing welcome accorded us by the inhabitants of Liverpool did much to make us forget the weight of the super-packs that we were all carrying. At these rest camps we were introduced to the famous British Army ration and although the jam was appreciated by all, the average doughboy didn't approve of the change from fresh beef and coffee to cheese and tea.

On May 17th the troops who had gone direct to Southampton embarked on a channel boat and landed at Le Havre early the next morning. The two battalions at Liverpool rested until the morning of the 18th and then entrained for Southampton.

The trip across England was very refreshing, after so many days on the water. The country was one beautiful picturesque garden. The hills and valleys were everywhere clothed in the verdant beauty of spring and every town through which we passed was spotlessly clean. The red tile roofs and paving appeared to have just been scrubbed and polished. The beauty of the country was greatly enhanced by the absence of fences, stone terraces and close-cropped hedges being used instead. During our stay at Southampton each organization was officially "welcomed overseas" by a British officer on behalf of King George V, and each man was given an autographed letter of welcome from the King. The citizens here, especially the women, seemed greatly interested in us and did everything possible to add to our pleasure and enjoyment.

On May 20th Col. Lindsey received his promotion to Brigadier General and was assigned to command of the 164th Brigade, Major Jewett being placed in command of the Regiment. On this date the last of our regiment embarked for France and the next morning found us winding our weary way up the hill to rest camps Nos. 1 and 2, about five miles from Le Havre. Here we learned that our division was to be brigaded with the British and our baggage in the future would be confined to what we carried on our backs. The time was spent in turning in American rifles and bayonets and drawing British equipment and salvaging a large majority of the equipment issued us at Camp Upton. Barrack bags most of which have never been seen since, were left for storage, and shortly thereafter the officers learned that of the 250 pounds of overseas equipment required to be brought by them they could retain 50 pounds, including bedding rolls. At this place we were issued gas masks and steel helmets and passed through a gas chamber where each man thoroughly tested the efficiency of his mask, realizing fully that his life might depend upon it in the future.

By this time, we had learned that "rest camps" were a travesty on the word "rest." The Englishman who named them certainly must have had a keen sense of humor. They seemed to have been so named because they were located in such places that after an organization had hiked to them the men, if given the opportunity, would gladly rest in spite of conditions at the camp. At Knotty Ash the men had their first experience in sleeping on a coffin-like bedsack placed on the floor. By the time we had mastered the art of about-facing on one without rolling off it was time to move to Southampton and there we slept on the floor without bedsacks; at rest camps in the vicinity of Le Havre we found the same accommodations with the added feature of crowding twenty-five men into a small tent. They were all able to lie down, by putting their feet together near the center pole and their heads outside the tent, the process of turning over being done "by the numbers."

In the right of the picture is shown the place where a direct hit was made on the kitchen of F Company, killing the Mess Sergeant, Company Clerk and several men of that Company. The house in the center of Hill was occupied as Battalion Headquarters. The old German bath house shows in the left hand corner of the picture.

CHAPTER III.

On May 23rd the last of the Regiment entrained at Le Havre for "somewhere in France," arriving the next morning at Eu, a town about 40 miles in rear of the Somme front. After hastily eating breakfast here, we took to the road for an all-day hike, with full equipment and that night the men slept for the first time in French barns, called in army parlance "billets." We found that we were one of ten American divisions that had been loaned to the British and in this area we were a tactical reserve for the British Fifth Army, who were daily expecting a drive on this front. Regimental headquarters was located at Horcelaines and the troops were billeted in the neighboring towns. Henceforth each battalion lived its own life, rarely coming in contact with the other battalions. It was many weeks before the Regiment was again billeted together.

Each step of our journey so far brought closer home to us the fact that we were approaching the front and caused us to think of the relation of the war to us as individuals much more than we had ever done before. Upon our landing at Liverpool the first sight to greet our eyes was a large military hospital. A few hundred yards from Knotty Ash was located a convalescent camp for injured British soldiers, and the neighborhood was thronged with men who had lost one or more limbs and who were glad to edify us with their experiences. As we got off the boat at Le Havre a long hospital train rolled up to the docks, filled with injured being evacuated to England and one couldn't help but wonder how long it would be before he would be coming back in that manner. In our reserve position on the Somme front we could hear the roar of the big guns and were visited by day and night by German planes. We were located not far from Abbeville and this town and the surrounding country was bombed heavily almost every night and many were the narrow escapes from injury that we experienced, though we were very fortunate in that we had only one man slightly wounded.

Our time here was spent in hard training under supervision of British training cadres. Although we would all have preferred being in a strictly American sector, the men took great interest in the instruction and worked hard. A large percentage of the officers and many non-coms were sent for short courses in various schools held by the British and very soon returned to their companies as qualified instructors in the latest methods of using grenades, Lewis guns, Vickers machine guns, etc., and the latest practices for gas defense.

About June 1st the Regiment moved by marching to a new area, twenty kilos distance, headquarters being located at Elincourt. The training schedule was continued in earnest and very soon each company had experts with the Lewis gun and everybody was doing good shooting with the British rifle. The men had adjusted themselves to conditions and when night came were glad to go "home" to their respective hay lofts for a few hours rest.

During our stay here officers and men from each Battalion and Company were sent to the front line trenches to get first hand information as to the work done there. After three weeks training with the British, evidently with the view of taking over a sector here, orders were changed, and we turned in all our British equipment, again drew American arms in their place, and on June 16th the Regiment entrained for an American sector.

We never became very enthusiastic over staying with the British for there was that "British Army Ration." We heard a lot about the "blooming bloody offan;" being "fed up" and learned to know what "carry on" meant, but never could understand when and how to use the expression "cherry-oh," or just what it signified; nor could we ever feel comfortable or know just how to act in the presence of the all powerful British "Sergeant Major." We rather liked the four o'clock tea, which nothing must be allowed to interfere with, but on the whole, were indeed glad to get back to an American outfit. One of the novelties we were introduced to while with the British was their baths. We marched an hour or two over hot dusty roads to reach the bath house, were allowed so much time to get in the bath, timed as we washed, timed as we rinsed, and timed as we dressed. In fact, the whole affair was much more one of timing than of bathing, for we would only be well under way in one of the phases of becoming clean, when time would be up and we would have to move on. Then followed the long march back to camp over the same hot dusty roads, so we felt after one of these baths that we were not in much better shape than when we started out.

By this time we had become accustomed to living in barns, had learned to "find" enough hay or straw to make a comfortable bed, and got along very comfortably in "billets." All the "easy methods to learn French" that had been bought in the States were brought out, and everyone started to try out his particular brand of "Parlez vous," with surprisingly unsatisfactory results. We got on pretty good terms with "Vin Rouge" and "Vin Blanc." All the towns the Regiment had been billeted in were about the same, several centuries old and badly out of repair. The village "Vamp" ran the "Vin Rouge" stand, the mayor was the oldest and most reputable looking citizen in the town and a man's wealth was judged by the size of his manure pile. We knew what the store signs "Estaminet," "Boucherie," "Boulangerie," etc., meant and felt we were getting along, nor when in the larger places did we try to get accommodations more than once at the "Hotel de Ville."

Orchard near Pylone, west of Cornay. The road through this orchard was the objective of the Regiment on October 9th. Companies E and F reached the road only to have their first lines wiped out with machine gun fire. Company A further to the right reached their objective, but found it lay on top of a cliff 100 feet high, which they were unable to scale.

CHAPTER IV.

Our trip to the American sector gave us our first real experience in the French "8-40" (eight chevaux or forty hommes) and as the trip lasted from noon of June 16th to the morning of June 18th, we had sufficient time to become well acquainted with this mode of transportation. How forty men and forty packs can get into one of those Frog cars will forever remain a mystery, but it is a known fact that it was done not only once, but numerous times. The sector we were going to was the Toul sector and to reach it it was necessary to go south below Paris, then up by Dijon, as the Boche were too close to Paris to allow promiscuous troop movements between the front and Paris. On the whole, this trip was very interesting as the various parts of the country we went through were quite different as regards the towns and natural scenery. Aside from the fact that uniforms were everywhere in evidence and we passed train load after train load of war material there was little to impress one with the fact that only a very short distance northward was being fought the greatest of all wars. Down around Paris and Dijon France looked very much like any other normal and industrious country, except that there was a noticeable absence of able-bodied men in civilian clothes.

On the morning of June 18th the trains pulled into Foug, a short distance below Toul and at dawn the Regiment unloaded and hiked to the towns of Franchville, Ville St. Etienne, and Lucy, north of Toul, where the different units were billeted and immediately took up further training. Here the guns at the front could be plainly heard and rumors became persistent that very soon the 328th would take their turn in the trenches. The 26th Division was at that time holding the sector which in reports is known as the Toul sector, a subdivision of the Lorraine front. The 82nd was scheduled to relieve the 26th Division, the 328th relieving the 104th Infantry. This relief took several days, one battalion being relieved at a time to avoid congestion of roads and noticeable troop movement. The relief was started June 26th and completed June 29th. The troops were moved to points immediately in rear of the sector at night on a narrow gauge railroad known as the Dekauville.

The 2nd Battalion under Major Buxton took over the actual front which extended from Bouconville to Rambucourt. The 328th being on the extreme left of the Division sector connected with the French between Bouconville and Broussey and our right connected with the 327th between Rambucourt and Beaumont. The 3rd Battalion held positions at Gerard Sas about 3 kilos behind the front, as support battalion, and the 1st Battalion was stationed at Cornieville still further back as reserve battalion. The system of reliefs was for the front line battalion to drop back to the reserve position, each of the other battalions moving forward to the next position.

This was the old American training sector where the green divisions were placed to learn the intricacies of troop movements and reliefs at night and become acquainted with that very important and nerve-racking routine of patrols. All the points along this front are familiar to the A. E. F. Montsec was in the immediate front with Xivray sticking out in our line like a sore thumb and Marvoisin in "No Man's Land," while a little to our right was Siecheprey, the scene of the famous raid on the 26th Division.

German machine gun hole on Hill 260, taken by the 2nd Battalion on October 8th. 123 machine guns were taken on that day from holes similar to above, together with 325 prisoners. The drive of the 1st Battalion on the 7th and of the 2nd Battalion on the 8th forced the Boche from in front of the 28th Division, relieved the 28th Division and forced the Boche to fall back in front of the 77th Division on our left. The above statement made by Gen. Pershing in 1919 at a review of the 82nd Division.

Everyone had read of and had difficulty in understanding the dreary monotony of trench warfare and here we were to realize it: to sit for days in a trench gazing intently at the enemy lines and never see anything to shoot at, chow details, wire stringing details, trench digging details, patrols every night with monotonous regularity and at the end of several weeks to be holding the same positions with nothing apparently accomplished.

The Regiment at this time was commanded by Col. Hunter B. Nelson, who had been assigned to its command June 26th, having served as attached since June 13th. All who had the pleasure of knowing Col. Nelson will remember him with feelings of affection. He was a man men serve for love. Everyone from his orderly to the majors he called son and his men were his constant thought. When an important patrol was on a dangerous mission he would sit up till early morning waiting for the news of its return.

On July 3rd under command of Major Johnson the 3rd Battalion relieved the 2nd Battalion in the front—the 2nd dropping back to Cornieville while the 1st moved up to positions vacated by the 3rd. On July 10th the 1st Battalion, under Major Jewett, relieved the 3rd with the corresponding rotations.

These weekly reliefs continued till August 5th, at which time our relief by the 356th Infantry, 89th Division, was completed and we, feeling like war-worn veterans, moved back to Troussey and Rigny La Salle by Dekauville the 1st and 3rd Battalions in the former town, Regimental Headquarters, 2nd Battalion, Headquarters, Supply and Machine Gun Companies in the latter.

Our stay in the trenches had been the same old story, a few men being killed by nervous sentries who halted and shot at the same time, usually with deadly effect; numerous patrols with one rather nasty little encounter in Xivray, where we had several casualties in the 3rd Battalion which was in the front line at that time; a few shells principally in Rambucourt, which at that time we called barrages; barrages then meaning to us any shelling wherein more than six shells were fired at the rate of one per minute or faster. It was here that Capt. Sissons of L. Co. was badly wounded by a shell fragment one night during a rather heavy shelling.

In Raulecourt at Regimental Headquarters we had Red Cross, Salvation Army and Y. M. C. A. huts where hot chocolate and doughnuts were served on the nights of reliefs to the boys coming out.

Gas was our great horror. A night rarely passed by but what some zealous gas sentry didn't send forth the alarm and not to be taking any chances every sentry in hearing would pick up the signal and start sounding his particular brand of noise maker. Soon the whole area would be echoing with the noise of horns, bells, rattles, etc., and men would adjust their masks, having a sick feeling in the stomach and chills down the spine. Men who knew no fear when it was a case of danger from personal combat would turn pale when that awful raucus klaxon grated out its alarm in the middle of the night. Nothing but actual experience could teach one about gas, and it was only a short time, however, till false alarms were at a minimum.

Sommerance, France, as it looked in February, 1919. At that time a city of the dead. Very different from the Sommerance we knew in October, 1918, when from early morn until late at night Boche planes circled overhead, and shells from the Boche Artillery in linecourt made traffic cops unnecessary.

While the time in this area was very quiet, every one got a lot of benefit from actual experience, and what was still more important, that feeling of confidence which differentiates the experienced soldier from the rookie.

As above stated, on August 5th the Regiment moved back to a rest area and there put in the time in drills of all sorts and generally cleaning up and preparing to go to the Chateau Thierry district to take over a sector. A part of the Division actually did go there, but suddenly plans were changed and the elements which had gone were recalled and the Division was ordered to relieve the 2nd Division at Pont-a-Mousson in what is known as the Marbache Sector. This move was made August 15th and 16th by Dekauville—the 2nd Battalion again taking the front line—3rd Battalion support at Dieulouard and 1st Battalion in reserve in Liverdun woods. Regimental Headquarters was at Dieulouard and Supply Company was at Belleville. The Regiment relieved the 6th Marines, the front line being taken over on August 16th.

Part of the Kremhilde-Stellung Line north of Sommerance, France. The line was penetrated at this point on October 14 by the 1st Battalion. On the evening of the 14th Companies B, D, G and H, totalling about 100 men, attempted to advance from this point and were met by a withering fire from the woods shown in this picture. They entered the woods but that night were ordered back to the wire shown in the picture.

CHAPTER V.

This sector, prior to the entry of American troops, was a typical quiet sector of the line, the "live and let live" principle having been strictly adhered to; so quiet was it that Pont-a-Mousson, a town of 30,000 inhabitants located one kilo inside the French lines, had not been evacuated by the inhabitants and life was proceeding there as if the times were normal. The advent of the 2nd Division, the first American troops in this area, seemed to be the cue for the natives to leave, however, as it had been proven in all instances that the American fighting spirit would not admit of calmly sitting down and never firing a shot. The thrifty citizens had left luxuriant gardens, and these, together with the abundant fruit, contributed quite a bit to the bill-of-fare, company cooks gaining a reputation for resourcefulness.

On the left of our regimental sector was the 360th Infantry of the 90th Division, and our right flank rested on the Moselle River. The position was well organized for defense but "No Man's Land" here held its terrors for American patrols. Both the French and German positions had been withdrawn a few hundred yards and the intervening area was filled with masses of barbed wire, through which it was impossible to go without knowing the beaten paths. The Boche had outpost positions in ruins of houses with tunnels leading to them and were familiar with every foot of the terrain. These conditions came very near to causing disaster for us more than once, but our only casualties were due to the surprising of two advanced day outposts.

This sector was in the beaten air path from Nancy to Metz, and every night the air was filled with the hum of motors, and one, and usually both of these cities were bombed. The anti-aircraft batteries of both places were well organized and each night saw heavy barrages.

On the night of August 24th the 3rd Battalion took over the front line, the 2nd going to the reserve position and the 1st to support, and on September 1st relief again took place, the 1st Battalion moving to the front line position. Support and Reserve Battalions were drilling hard during this time, devoting all their time to maneuvers with the aid of all auxiliary weapons and each day saw its own problem fully worked out before inspectors from every headquarters from regimental to G. H. Q. Everywhere could be heard rumors of an impending American drive and the constantly increasing stream of all varieties of artillery and other war supplies toward the front indicated that it would be a show worth while. Our strenuous training in attack problems had eradicated the glaring errors and by the time it came to again make another relief, we all admitted that we were "good."

On the night of September 9th the 2nd Battalion moved up to relieve the front line, the 3rd Battalion moving to support and the 1st Battalion moving back to the vicinity of Dieulouard, instead of the usual reserve position in the Liverdun woods. The air was surcharged with all sorts of rumors and orders respecting the approaching drive were expected hourly. The suspense continued until the afternoon of the 11th, when word was received that the drive would begin the next morning, the zero hour for artillery being 1:15. Orders stated that the mission of our regiment was to keep in contact with the enemy at all times, but to remain in its present position until further orders. Our 1st Battalion was designated as the liaison Battalion between our Regiment and the 360th Infantry, who were on our left; accordingly, on the night of the 11th they moved to a position in rear of the front line junction of the two regiments. Our position was that of "holding the hinge" for the drive and was by no means an enviable one, as it required us to hold our right flank stationary at the same time keeping our left flank in liaison with the 360th, who were to advance. Interest was keyed to the highest point and everybody feverishly awaited the zero hour. From 1:15 on the morning of September 12th until 5:30 there took place the greatest barrage of the war, up until that time, and then the rolling barrage began. Throughout the 12th our patrols kept up contact as ordered and met with uniform severe resistance. First Lieutenant Charles F. Harrison of "F" Company lost his life while bravely leading one of these patrols and our casualties from this source throughout the day were about 25. On the afternoon of the 12th, Lieutenant Donald M. Love, with four men, penetrated the enemy's line to a depth of two kilometers, reaching the town of Norroy.

On the morning of the 13th we were all gratified at the news received concerning the success of the drive and at the indications that the enemy was about to withdraw from our immediate front. This appearing certain, at 13 hours on Friday the 13th, Field Order No. 13 issued by 164th Brigade Headquarters called for the advance of the 2nd Battalion to the heights north of Norroy. The 3rd Battalion was to support the advance. Shortly after dark, Col. Wetherill (then Lieutenant-Colonel), who had been placed in tactical command of the two battalions began the advance and in spite of the intense darkness and inconceivable mass of barbed wire, the compass direction of advance was held to the degree, each element arriving in the position assigned to it. No resistance was encountered and there were no casualties.

Everywhere in the town of Norroy were indications that the Boche had left very hurriedly. Cooked meals were found, as well as undestroyed maps and military records of value to us. We also found about fifteen old men and women, natives of the town, who had been there throughout the war. Their gladness at their liberation and the advent of the Americans was a sight never to be forgotten. This being our first experience in occupying enemy-held territory, everybody was in high spirits and very soon German cigars, cigarettes and beer were being passed around freely.

Aerial observation revealed our advance to the enemy early in the morning of the 14th and about noon the town and the surrounding territory were heavily shelled with H. E. and gas. This shelling was intense and was kept up throughout the afternoon and well into the night, causing the air to be continually charged with gas. As there were no gas proof positions in the town, it was necessary for everybody to don their masks and keep them on, sometimes as long as four hours on a stretch. The discipline of the troops was good, though, and gas casualties were very slight. The continued shelling took its toll, however, and this, together with the continued strain and lack of rest and hot food for the previous 48 hours, was very trying on the men. As an additional advance was contemplated a relief was ordered and on the night of the 14th the 3rd Battalion took over the front line and the 1st Battalion who had been relieved from liaison duty moved up to support them. The 2nd Battalion moved back to the vicinity of Dieulouard for a much needed rest.

On the morning of the 15th orders were issued for the 3rd Battalion to advance and occupy Vandieres together with the hills to the north of that town. The attack began at 1:00 P. M. with companies K and M in the front line and I and L in support. The attack was made with practically no artillery preparation and our forces were at all times in plain sight of the enemy to the front and right flank; consequently we were heavily shelled throughout the advance by enemy artillery firing at point blank range. In spite of this, however, the men went forward dauntlessly until the objective was reached. Shortly after the attack began Major Johnson turned his ankle and, being unable to advance, delivered the command to Capt. Rumph, who was seriously wounded a short while later. Capt. Clarkson then took command and directed the Battalion throughout the remainder of the action. The objective was reached at 3:30 and the remainder of the day was spent in organizing the position and caring for the wounded. The casualties suffered during the engagement totalled 185, the following officers being seriously wounded: Captains Rumph and Cooper and Lieutenants Sutherland and W. E. Cox.

On the evening of September 14th the 1st Battalion had taken over the support positions south of Norroy, which had been evacuated by the 3rd Battalion when they moved forward to relieve the 2nd Battalion. These were held till noon of the 15th, at which time the 1st Battalion was ordered to move forward as support battalion in the attack made by the 3rd Battalion on that date. The 1st Battalion moved through Norroy to the ridges north of that town, remaining in this position for the balance of the afternoon. After dark the 1st Battalion was ordered to relieve the front line which had suffered severely during the attack. This relief was made under very trying conditions—the Boche keeping up intense artillery fire on the positions. The ridges near the river just north of Vandieres were directly under the German guns and offered very little protection from fire, so it was decided to take up positions in trenches just south of Vandieres at this point. The line decided on was with the right flank on the Moselle River just south of Vandieres. From there the line ran West for about 600 meters, then Northwest, taking in the ridges west and northwest of Vandieres. The town of Vandieres being in a pocket and directly under our guns, was consequently untenable for any enemy forces and in addition the support companies furnished strong outposts at the town and along the roads and river.

A considerable part of our line was old German trenches and at the time of the relief a strong party of engineers went forward and turned these trenches so as to face them toward the enemy, also greatly assisting in digging new trenches. These positions were held until three A. M. of September 18th at which time the 90th Division moved to the right, taking them over. The artillery fire here was intense, as we received fire not only from the front, but also from our right flank across the river, with big shells coming from the Metz forts. On the night of September 17th-18th before our relief by the 360th, a concentrated gas attack was made on our left, which lasted several hours, causing a number of casualties in D Company from Mustard Gas burns, Capt. Lewis and Capt. (then Lieutenant) Candler being among those burned. Right after the relief a heavy shelling of the rear areas took toll from the companies moving back. Upon the relief of the Regiment Col. Nelson was transferred and Col. (then Lieutenant-Colonel) Wetherill took command. Major Buxton had been appointed Division Inspector some weeks previous to the St. Mihiel drive, but did not take up his new duties until this time. Major (then Captain) Tillman was given command of the 2nd Battalion.

During the afternoon of the 18th the Regiment moved, partly by trucks and partly by marching, to the Marbache woods situated on a very high hill south of Belleville. This was the first time since our arrival in France that the entire Regiment was billeted together. Here we were re-equipped and got what rest we could in the continual rain which lasted our entire stay there. Due to casualties, a certain amount of reorganization was necessary. The plans of the Meuse-Argonne were kept very secret and we had no idea what our next move would be. On the evening of the 23rd we were informed that we would move to a new sector the following day, and the usual preparations were made.

CHAPTER VI.

On the morning of September 24th the Regiment left the Marbache sector and embussed. After travelling all day, we arrived at Auzeville shortly after midnight, the 1st and 2nd Battalions marching to the Foret D'Argonne and camping in the woods in what was known as Camp Mallory, while the 3rd Battalion marched to and occupied an old French Camp on the southeastern edge of the forest. The Regiment reached its Camp between one and two A. M. September 26th. The animal drawn transport of the Regiment meanwhile had left the Marbache sector on September 20th, and had made the journey in four stages.

The 82nd Division was attached to the First Army Corps, and was reserve for the Army. The 3rd Battalion was designated as reserve for the 164th Brigade. Shortly after we arrived in the woods, the preliminary barrage commenced thundering off to the north, and at 5:30 September 26th the infantry made the initial attack of the Meuse-Argonne Offensive. The zone of action of the First Corps, to which the Regiment was attached, was bounded on the east by Vanquis, Very, Sommerance and Imecourt, all inclusive, and on the west by La Harazee, inclusive, Binerville, Lancon, Grand Ham, all exclusive, and Grand Pre, inclusive. The mission of the Corps was to reduce the Foret D'Argonne by flanking it from the east; to assist in cutting off hostile artillery fire and observation from the eastern edge of the forest, and upon arriving at the Corps objective, to advance to the American Army objective.

During the next few days, the Regiment was held in readiness to move forward on an hour's notice, and while in this position, training was carried on daily. The country to our immediate front, and especially the road leading to Les Islettes, La Harazee and Varennes was reconnoitered by the Regimental and Battalion Commanders and by Capt. Adone D. Tomasello, Regimental Operations Officer, Lieutenant W. K. Merritt, Regimental Intelligence Officer, and Lieutenants J. G. Roberts, J. M. Garner, Edwin U. O. Waters, Battalion Intelligence Officers. Scouts also went forward and examined the terrain. During most of this period, Auzeville and the near vicinity was subjected to shell fire. Captain Paul P. Goold, who had been Regimental Adjutant, left the Regiment here and returned to the United States; Lieutenant A. G. Eritzland, Regimental Personnel Adjutant, was transferred to C. H. Q. and a number of N. C. O.'s were sent to the Army Candidates School. Lieutenant W. F. Enneking was appointed to fill the vacancy in the Regimental Adjutant's office, and Lieutenant T. B. Fay became Regimental Personnel Officer, and a number of N. C. O.'s and privates received promotions.

On October 3rd, the Division passed from the Army Reserve to the reserve of the First Army Corps, and on the afternoon of that day, the Regiment moved north by way of Les Islettes to the vicinity of Loshères where it bivouaced for the night. The march was resumed by 7 o'clock on the following morning, and after passing through the territory only a few days prior occupied by the 77th Division, across the "No Man's Land" of four years standing, which our artillery had just recently blasted into a mere mass of ground, wire and wreckage, the Regiment, after a march of 12 kilometers, took up a position to the east of Camp Mahaut, in the vicinity of a German cemetery, where it went into bivouac.

The Regiment remained at this place until Sunday, October 6th. While here maneuvers took place, and reconnoissance was made to the north and to the north-east. On the morning of Sunday, the 6th of October, the Regimental and First Battalion Commanders went forward to Apremont, and in the afternoon, the Regimental and Battalion Commanders, with Brigadier General Lindsey, reconnoitered the country to the north of Baulny, including Chaudron Farm, Montrebeau Woods, and the southern vicinity of Exermont. At this time, information had been received that the Regiment would move into the lines that night, and would go over the top the following morning. Upon the return of the above mentioned officers of the Regiment, they found the companies already preparing to move. The Officers were hurriedly assembled, and by the light of a few candles in a tent in the cemetery, the general plan of the operations of that night and the following day was gone over by the Regimental commander.

At 8:00 P. M. the 1st Battalion leading, followed by the 2nd and 3rd Battalions and Machine Gun Company, the Regiment moved out in the direction of Varennes. Upon going out of the forest and entering the valley, the Regiment halted, where it remained until midnight. While here, the 1st Battalion dropped their packs, and made up their combat packs. Meanwhile, the Regimental Commander was at Division Headquarters and very late in the evening, received the orders for the attack. Upon his return, the Regiment continued its march through Varennes and along the main army road in the direction of Fleville, which was at this time in possession of the enemy. The night was exceptionally dark, a light rain falling, and the road was a mass of traffic, slowly wending its way both north and south. The Divisional Artillery and Machine Gun organizations were moving forward to their positions for the coming morning action. The infantry, in columns of twos, slowly but surely made its way through this traffic. Only the best of disciplined troops could have possibly made a march of this character. As the Regiment went north, the road came under shell fire and considerable gas was experienced.

The march was approximately fourteen kilometers long, and by reason of the road conditions, the troops did not arrive in the vicinity of their positions until after 5 o'clock. On the road up, the 3rd Battalion which was acting as Brigade Reserve, took up its position on the eastern side of the road about two kilometers north of Baulny, where it dug in. The 2nd Battalion, which had been designated to support the 1st Battalion in the jump off, continued to the vicinity of Depot D'Munitions, where it took up a position along the east and west side of the army road. A portion of the 321st M. G. Battalion was attached to the Battalion for the purpose of the attack. The Machine Gun Company of the Regiment had given the right of way on the road to the artillery, and by the time it reached Depot D'Munitions, it was nearly daylight, and it took up a position in this vicinity, taking advantage of all available cover.

Road leading from Chatel-Chehery to Cornay, over which the 3rd Battalion advanced to capture Cornay.

Shortly thereafter the enemy planes sought it out and bombed it. The combat trains were placed just north of Baulney, while the field train remained just west of Varennes.

The 1st Battalion arrived east of La Forge, about 5:10 o'clock, and immediately formed for an attack just east of La Forge and facing west. "A" and "C" Companies were in the front and "B" and "D" were held in support in the woods Des Granges about one kilometer east of La Forge. A heavy fog had settled on the valley, which rendered it quite impossible to see more than 100 meters to the front. The Regimental P. C. was established at La Forge, and the Regimental commander, with his headquarters personnel, immediately moved to this position. The sector of the Regiment over which the attack was to be launched was bounded on the north by Fem Des Granges and Hill 180 exclusive, and on the south by Fem Des Granges and La Forge and Chatel Chehery inclusive. Its first objective was the Hill 223 and it was then ordered to proceed to the Decaeville railroad, the Corps objective. The 327th Infantry was on our right and the 110th Infantry of the 28th Division was on our left. The attack was ordered held and "A" and "C" companies took cover in ditches. Due to being in better position to form up for attack unobserved, "B" and "D" companies were designated as assaulting companies.

At 11:15 "B" and "D" companies moved out of the woods in double line of small columns with "D" company on the left and "B" on the right. They advanced west over open country, passing through "A" and "C" companies. The attacking companies had to advance nearly two kilometers, at all times subject to enemy observation from the west and northwest, and to ford the River Aire before reaching the base of Hill 223. While going forward the troops were subjected to a terrific concentration of shell fire. The troops moved forward under perfect control as if in a practiced maneuver, and by taking advantage of favorable situations covered the distance with comparatively few casualties. Shortly after reaching the Hill, Capt. Richard Douglas of "B" Company was painfully wounded and Lieutenant Day took command of the company. The objective was taken by 1:00 P. M., and with it a number of prisoners. The companies then reorganized preparatory to a further advance. During the advance "H" company had acted as a combat liaison unit between our Division and the 28th Division on the left. When the leading companies had passed the River Aire, the First Battalion P. C. moved to La Forge, and shortly after our first prisoners were brought in and after being examined were sent to the Brigade P. C. Lieutenant W. K. Merritt, Regimental Intelligence Officer, and Lieutenant Walter M. Little of the Supply Company started back with these prisoners along the La Forge road but before they had gone very far Lieutenant Merritt was wounded, and Lieutenant Little received wounds from which a few days later he died. There was attached to the Battalion the One Pounder and Trench Mortar platoons, of Headquarters Company. Immediately to the south of Des Granges Woods was the Battalion first aid station, which continued its work all day and night, moving forward to Chatel Chehery on October 8th. As soon as the leading companies had left the woods in the attack, the place was subjected to a terrific shelling, lasting about two hours; evidently upon the supposition that the remainder of the Battalion was there.

Town of Sommerance taken from the Boche on October 12th. In this town General Lindsey and his staff had their Headquarters ahead of a Battalion Headquarters of the 42nd Division, who were supposed to be as far advanced as our own Regiment.

At 2:00 P. M. from Hill 223 the advance was continued by squad rushes. "D" company had covered 200 meters in this manner when a hot machine gun fire from off the left flank and in front of our neighboring unit opened up and the enemy launched a strong counter-attack from the north and west under a terrific machine gun barrage. "D" Company and a part of "B" Company stubbornly resisted, and after an hour the counter-attack broke down. The enemy, however, kept up its machine gun fire until dark. The companies then consolidated their positions for the night. During the consolidation and for some time later, these companies were under shell and machine gun fire from the west, north and northeast, which rendered their position most difficult to hold. While this counter attack was being made a heavy barrage was put down between the river and Les Granges Woods, being placed no doubt in order to prevent the bringing up of any supporting troops.

When visibility grew poor at the approach of night, "A" and "C" companies, which had remained in the ditches during the day, were withdrawn to a position a little to the south, and reorganized, and held there in readiness. Just at dark, a heavy rain set in and severe shelling opened up on our front line and along the line of the Battalion's advance. Information was received at the Regimental P. C. that the enemy was preparing to counter-attack, and, by the Brigade, that our front line Battalion and Regimental Headquarters had been cut off. The rest of the 1st and 2nd Battalions prepared to come to their support. La Forge however was still in our possession, and "A" Company, the One Pounder and Trench Mortar Platoons, and the balance of the Machine Gun Company of the Regiment were brought forward to La Forge. Our lines were not counter-attacked again that night, and our front line at all times held Hill 223. During the evening a detachment of Engineers reported to the Regimental Commander and were assigned some work in bridging the Aire. The Regimental P. C. moved forward to Chatel Chehery and during the early hours of the 8th, three platoons of the Machine Gun Company, One Pounder and Trench Mortar platoons crossed the Aire River and took up positions in the vicinity of Hill 223 and Chatel Chehery. During the night "A" and "C" Companies were both moved forward to Chatel Chehery.

At 1:15 on the morning of the 8th the Battalion and Company Commanders of the 2nd Battalion were ordered to the Regimental P. C. and were given detailed instructions to execute a passage of the lines and continue the advance to the Corps objective. The Battalion moved out at 2:00 and advanced across the river and intervening valley to Hill 223 and the ground immediately north of that point. During this preparatory advance, the enemy artillery registered a direct hit on the only bridge across the river and it was necessary to ford the badly swollen stream. In spite of this hardship and numerous casualties due to the heavy shelling, the troops executed the passage of the lines in good order and were in position ready to advance at the zero hour, which was 6:00 o'clock. From right to left in the front line were "E" Company under Capt. (then First Lieutenant) Hopper and "G" Company under Major (then Captain) Danforth. The support companies were from right to left, "F" Company commanded by Capt. (then First Lieutenant) Cox (Capt. Forman having been evacuated) and "H" Company under First Lieutenant Brown.

Road to Lieutenant-Colonel Boyle's back leads to Châtel Chehery; road to his left was the road over which the Regiment marched to Fleville during the day under observation of the enemy. This picture is typical of the devastation wrought in Cornay by American and Boche Artillery.

The orders called for a concerted attack by the 327th Infantry on the right, 328th Infantry in the center and the 110th Infantry on the left, all driving west to the corps objective, preceded by a heavy barrage. The barrage failed to materialize, as did the attack of the 110th Infantry, but at zero hour our 2nd Battalion moved out with our Machine Gun Company firing a barrage from Hill 223. The One Pounder Platoon was also doing effective work from this position. The advance continued with slight resistance for about 700 meters, but then met with withering machine gun fire from the front and both flanks. It developed that the original assignment of sectors left a gap of a kilometer between the 327th and 328th, so that our attack was launched with both flanks exposed. The advance continued, however, in spite of these most adverse conditions until 11:30, when it was utterly impossible to proceed further without flank protection.

The remaining elements of one of the support platoons of "G" Company, seventeen men in all, were sent around the left rear to silence the enemy guns on the left flank and two platoons of "F" Company were ordered to attack on the right of "E" Company and cover that flank. The patrol to the left flank met with great success, accomplishing its mission and returning, under command of Corporal Alvin C. York, with 132 prisoners, in spite of the fact that seven of their number were killed and two seriously wounded. This has been spoken of as one of the outstanding accomplishments of the war. On the right flank, however, the terrain could not be covered even in time of peace without the aid of scaling ladders and the attack was foredoomed to failure.

The left flank was thus enabled to advance some further, but their heavy casualties had so decimated the ranks that the resistance met stopped them again, short of the objective. Lieutenant Kirby P. Stewart, leading one of the assault platoons of "G" Company was killed while advancing with his men after he had been severely wounded and the losses all along the line were very heavy. As further progress was impossible under conditions, it was arranged to have two companies of the 327th attack in the gap between their sector and ours and two platoons of "H" Company were sent forward to reinforce our left flank. The attack was renewed at 3:30 P. M. and the objective reached at 5:00 P. M., the position being consolidated for the night. The day's operations resulted in the capture of three officers, 274 men, four field pieces, two heavy mortars, four anti-tank guns and 130 heavy machine guns, besides quantities of material. During these operations, Lieutenants Winston, Harwick and Meehan were severely wounded.

During the night of the 8th "A" Company was moved up from the village to the support of "E" and "H" and shortly after dark "C" Company moved forward and took up a position in support of "I" and "M" Companies of the 327th Infantry, which were attacking the ridge to our north. At about 4 o'clock on the morning of the 9th, "A" Company was withdrawn from its position of support, to Chatel Chery, preparatory to the attack on Cornay Ridge at 8 o'clock on the 9th. Under cover of a heavy fog, the Regiment attacked due north; "A" Company was on the right with two platoons of "C" Company to its left, with "E" and "F" Companies further to the west. "H" and "D" Companies were held in support of "E" and "F" and "G" Company covered the left flank of the Regimental sector. Two Platoons of "C" Company remained in Chatel Chehery in reserve. "A" and "C" Companies on the right advanced under cover of the heavy fog until the steep side of the ridge prevented further progress. At this moment the enemy opened fire. In the struggle that followed, Lieutenant Orville M. Coston of Company "A" and several men of his platoon were killed. Artillery fire was requested and the line drew back a short distance from the position which was to be shelled. Our artillery at 12:15 opened up and continued for nearly an hour with good effect. "A" and "C" Companies held their positions all day, although immediately under the guns of the enemy. Later on the two platoons of "C" Company which had been held in reserve, relieved "D" Company, and during the night, the platoons of "C" Company toward the right were withdrawn, leaving "A" Company holding the right flank of the Regimental sector.

"E" and "F" Companies advanced through a valley that had been saturated with phosgene gas and made a determined attack on the steep ridge in front of them, but on account of the heavy casualties suffered during the preceding engagements were unable to hold the ground they gained. They were ordered to retire to their original positions and a check of the 2nd Battalion made shortly thereafter revealed the fact that there were only 88 effectives left in the organization.

On the morning of the 8th our Third Battalion was ordered to support an attack of the 327th on Cornay Ridge and early that morning set out to report to the Headquarters on Hill 180. It was necessary for them to cross the Aire River after daybreak and they suffered heavily from the ensuing shelling. "I" and "K" Companies were sent forward in attack at 7:00 A. M. and Companies "L" and "M" advanced to reinforce the firing line in the afternoon. The attack on Cornay was hotly contested, but by nightfall we had taken several buildings on the outskirts of the town, the Germans remaining in possession of the town itself. Several patrols were sent into the town during the night, but were unable to hold it, due to heavy artillery fire and the fact that every approach to the village was enfiladed by machine guns. We sustained many casualties on these patrols, but succeeded in capturing 135 prisoners and several machine guns.

On the morning of October 9th the enemy counter-attacked the positions in and around Cornay and under cover of the dense fog succeeded in cutting the town completely off. The American troops present took refuge in a few buildings on the edge of town, but this position soon became untenable and to save loss of additional lives, the Commander, an officer of the 327th, decided to surrender. All the officers and all but six of the men from the 323th who were present succeeded in escaping and making their way back to our lines. During the two days action Lieutenant Goldsmith was killed and Lieutenants Hood, Teague, Haines, Bell, Shipp, Waller and Cobb were wounded. The effective strength of the Battalion was at this time about 150 men. On the night of the 10th the remainder of the Battalion rejoined the Regiment at Pylone.

On the morning of October 10th the 325th Infantry passed over the lines of the Regiment, and continued the attack towards the north. The Second Battalion remained, however, in the position it had occupied the night before, during the balance of the day. Since early on the morning of the 7th, the Regiment had been continuously engaged in combat, and had suffered severely from shell and machine gun fire and from gas and had had but little time for rest or food. Notwithstanding the terrific strain, the troops had kept up well and had performed their duty with great credit. The day of the 10th was the first since the commencement of the attack that there had been any opportunity for rest or feeding. On this day, the companies were reorganized and fed. Parties went forward and collected our dead and buried them in a little graveyard which had been set aside in the village church yard. The battle field was policed by a special detail sent out by the respective Battalions, which recovered a great deal of equipment from the dead and seriously wounded. The vigorous and constant attacks that the Regiment had launched from the east into the flank of the Argonne where the enemy had been holding up the advance of the 77th Division through the forest, had been effected by the morning of the 10th and the Argonne at that time was practically clear of the enemy. The Regiment had performed the first two missions assigned as corps missions, viz: reducing the forest by flanking from the east and destroying observation and preventing artillery fire from the right edge of the forest. It is most significant that at the very place where the Regiment had so effectively driven this flanking wedge it had at the first opportunity buried its gallant dead.

Late in the evening of October 10th, orders were received for the Regiment to assemble at the cross road near Pylone on the ridge running west of Cornay. The Battalion Commanders were called into Regimental headquarters and given routes by which this march was to be made, and at 3 o'clock October 11th, the Regiment moved. The Third and First Battalions marched through Cornay and then west along the ridge while the Second Battalion marched along the Decauville railroad to its positions. The Regiment assembled just about daylight. Regimental P. C. was established at the cross roads and the troops dug in and remained under cover during the day. The Regiment at this time was brigaded with the 326th Infantry under General Cronin. At about 3:00 P. M. orders were received designating the Second Battalion as Division Reserve, and shortly afterwards the Battalion moved to the vicinity of Fleville, and reported to General Lindsey, 164th Brigadier Commander. The Battalion was then sent to bivouac on the ridge northwest of Fleville.

At dark on October 11th, the Regimental and First Battalion Commanders and Operations Officer reconnoitered the front and the First Battalion then moved to a position in the Bois Marcq south of the village of Marcq in support of the 326th Infantry. "C" and "D" companies held the Battalion front and "A" and "B" were placed in the support positions. The Battalion dug in and remained there until noon of the 12th, when it reassembled and moved east, following the Regiment to Fleville by way of Cornay.

On the morning of October 12th, orders were received transferring the Regiment back to the 164th Brigade and directing that it report to General Lindsey at Fleville. During the morning of the 12th, the Third Battalion which had been held at Pylone, marched to Fleville, followed in the afternoon by the First Battalion. The Third Battalion bivouaced in the woods just east of the Second Battalion while the First Battalion went into the woods about 1500 meters east of Fleville, and south of the east and west road, where sufficient fox holes, but recently occupied by the Germans, were found to take care of the troops. Here the Regiment was once more assembled together and remained during the night of the 12th, and day of the 13th. The Regimental P. C. was established in Fleville. Positions were under shell fire at all times while the presence of enemy planes compelled us to remain under cover of the woods during the day time. On the afternoon of the 13th, Lieutenant Colonel Wetherill and Battalion Commanders and Company Commanders of the First Battalion went forward to reconnoiter the position which was to be occupied that night preparatory to a general advance to be made on the following morning. This reconnoissance was made exceedingly difficult by reason of the presence of enemy planes in large numbers, flying at a low altitude, which at this time were directing artillery fire. The officers making reconnoissance covered the country up to within about 300 meters of Sommerance, where the P. C. of the 327th Infantry was at that time established, when darkness rendered further work to the front impossible. The officers returned to Fleville and at the Regimental P. C. the orders of the following day's operations were gone over by the Regimental Commander.

Shortly after dark, the Battalions drew their iron rations and ammunition and marched by Battalion northward. The roads were heavily shelled and a number of casualties were suffered on the way up. Regimental P. C. moved from Fleville to a position near the cross roads, about 300 meters south of Sommerance. Shortly after midnight on October 14th, the first Battalion reached Sommerance, relieving the forward Battalion of the 327th Infantry, performed with "C" Company on the right and "D" Company on the left while "A" and "B" Companies were in support of "C" and "D" respectively. Each company covered a front of 250 meters. Our front line was about 500 meters north of the Sommerance-Saint Juvin Road. Two platoons of "H" Company were directed to follow as "moppers-up." Our Regimental boundary line was the same as Divisional only east, running through Sommerance, Saint George and Imecourt, and was approximately one kilometer in width. Troops occupied fox holes during the early morning, as heavy machine gun fire was causing casualties. An artillery officer with two 75's reported to the First Battalion during the early morning and the guns were placed just north of the road. The 328th Machine Gun Company, under command of Lieutenant Edward C. DeSaussure, was attached to the Battalion and the guns were promptly put into position. The One Pounder and Trench Mortar Platoons were also designated to attack with the leading Battalion. The 42nd Division was on our right and the 163rd Brigade was on our left. The relief of the leading Battalion of the 327th Infantry was completed about two o'clock on the 14th, and the First Battalion was established on the Sommerance-Saint Juvin Road about 500 meters west of Sommerance.

Meanwhile the Second Battalion, which had been relieved from duty as Division Reserve, with the Third Battalion, moved to a position along the Saint Juvin-Sommerance Road in support of the attacking Battalion. A platoon of "C" Company 321st Machine Gun Battalion was attached to the support and the other platoon acted with the combat liaison unit between our Regiment and the Regiment on the right. The country over which the attack was to advance was entirely different from that in which the Regiment had fought in the Argonne. Here was rolling uplands and plains without any vegetation whatsoever, with here and there a deep ravine and small patches of trees and undergrowth.

"H" hour had been set for 8:30. Just before this time Regimental P. C. moved up to P. C. of the attacking Battalion, which was in a hole on the south side of the Saint Juvin-Sommerance Road. Prior to 8:30 a preliminary barrage was laid down by our artillery, and at 8:30 the creeping barrage started forward. The First Battalion, thinking the Regiment on the right had come up, went forward. The first objective was a position running east and west about 500 meters south of the Saint Juvin-Saint Georges Road, and our second objective two kilometers beyond. As soon as the Infantry arose to the attack, they were met by very heavy artillery, rifle and machine gun fire from German trenches about 200 yards to their immediate front, while considerable gas was laid down in the vicinity of Sommerance. The machine gun fire was particularly severe and considerable casualties were suffered before the troops had advanced a hundred meters. Lieutenant J. W. Hatton, who was leading the front platoon of "C" Company, had sighted a machine gun nest and was in the act of taking a rifle shot at one of the gunners when he was instantly killed. Lieutenant Leon Folsom and Lieutenant Ira D. Coombs of "D" Company on the left were both severely wounded. Both "C" and "D" companies advanced slowly, meeting machine gun nests on their way and especially in the small patches of woods, which were scattered here and there to their front and flank. By working around these nests, the guns were finally silenced and gunners killed or captured, about 100 prisoners being taken. In this way, the leading companies steadily pushed forward and pierced the "Kriemhilde Stellung" line. "B" and "A" companies followed in support with two platoons of "H" company as "moppers-up" covering their rear. When "D" Company had crossed the Saint Juvin-Saint Georges Road, "B" Company went forward to the left and filled in the gap between the Regiment and the Regiment on the left. In this move considerable fire was encountered and Lieutenant Royal was severely wounded, but continued to direct his platoon.

By this time, our line had advanced well beyond the first objective, and was making its way through the enemy wire and advancing towards the second objective. As the unit on our right had failed to keep up with our lines, our flank was open and further progress under these conditions was deemed inadvisable. Shortly after the jump off, the First Battalion P. C. moved forward. The Major, in going forward was accompanied by Lieutenant DeSaussure of the Machine Gun Company, who had been previously wounded but refused to be evacuated. Only a short distance had been covered when Lieutenant DeSaussure was instantly killed by a bursting shell, and the command of the machine gun company passed to Lieutenant Robert F. Mitchell. About this time Regimental P. C. moved from the hole on the road to a cellar in the western part of Sommerance. About 11 o'clock the Second Battalion in support moved forward, following the leading Battalion at 500 meters. "G" and "H" Companies led with "E" and "F" following in support. The Third Battalion followed the supporting Battalion at the same distance. The enemy laid down a heavy barrage across the lines of the advancing Battalions in order to prevent the relief reaching the front line. The position reached by the First Battalion was a line from the south edge of the Ravine au Pierre due east to a point in front where the wire of the Kriemhilde Stellung line crossed the St. Juvin-St. Georges Road, then broke back in a southeasterly direction about 300 meters to connect with the 42nd Division on our right. As this was only a short distance beyond the Kriemhilde Stellung wire, the 2nd Battalion, which had been ordered to take over the front line, took up a holding position behind this wire, digging in after dark, thereby gaining the added protection of a strong band of wire in front, the First Battalion Companies withdrawing after dark to support positions.

The First and Second Battalion P. C.'s moved forward and occupied together a hole at 99.5-86.25. At this time, Lieutenant Robert F. Mitchell of the Machine Gun Company was killed. The strength of both the First and Second Battalions had been greatly weakened during the day and the two Battalions were reorganized under Major Boyle as an operating battalion with companies retaining their identity. The Third Battalion, meanwhile, now reduced to only 90 men, dug in on a position one kilometer north of the Saint Juvin-Sommerance Road, where it remained until relieved by the 327th Infantry on the night of October 17th.

During the early morning of October 15th, an order was received that our Regiment would attack as soon as the 42nd Division came abreast of the leading Battalion, and at 7:25 a preliminary bombardment would take place, and at 7:30 the creeping barrage would move forward. At about 7:00 o'clock the Boche put down a heavy barrage of shell and machine gun fire along the Regimental front and at 7:15 counter-attacked in strength. Our troops met them with fire and at 7:25 our own bombardment started, followed in five minutes by the creeping barrage. The counter-attack was completely defeated.

The 166th Infantry on our right did not advance and at 8 o'clock word was received that the Germans were off our right in front of the 166th. A strong patrol was sent to clear up the situation and shortly afterwards returned with prisoners and reported that the balance of the Boche had fled. During the day, the enemy endeavored to drive us out of our positions, which had become a dangerous salient in the enemy line. The terrific shell and machine gun fire was kept up nearly all day while enemy planes at low altitude flew over our lines and attacked the Infantry. Lieutenant Walter L. McArthur moved his One Pounder Platoon up during the day and fired at many targets, while our machine gun company did effective work from the woods on our right. An artillery observer occupied a hole near the forward P. C. and several targets were given to the accompanying guns. Telephone service was established but shelling cut the wires many times during the day; however, the signal men fearlessly and without delay made good the breakage. It rained intermittently during that day and at night a steady rain had set in.

Shortly after dark the companies of the operating Battalion were relieved by a Battalion of the 327th Infantry and became reserve for the Brigade. The Battalion took up its position along the road to Sommerance and at Sommerance itself. The strength of the Battalion had been severely taxed and at this time there were not more than one or two officers to a company of twenty to forty men. The making of a relief was at all times a dangerous operation by reason of the fact that troops had to travel across wide open fields, which at various places were subject to shell fire.

German Military Road through the Argonne Forest reached the afternoon of October 8th. The Germans counter-attacked across this road early on the morning of the 9th, but were driven back with heavy losses. The Decauville Railroad does not show in this picture but paralleled this Military Road.

While in reserve, the troops occupied shell holes along the Saint Juvin-Sommerance Road and some of the ruins in Sommerance. We were in this position 24 hours as reserve Battalion, and 24 hours as Brigade Support. At this time, what remained of the 327th Infantry was placed under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Wetherill. In making reliefs by Battalions, the First and Second Battalions of the 328th, 327th Infantry, and a combination of the Third Battalion, 328th Infantry and part of the 327th Infantry were used, each relief occupying the front line for a period of twenty-four hours, commencing about 8:00 P. M.

The Machine Gun Company of the 328th Infantry had followed the Infantry forward and aided in its advance. The heavy rain of October 15th and 16th had filled up the shell holes occupied by the men. The company was reduced to no officers and 27 men and under these conditions at 11 o'clock on October 16th, it was relieved and sent back to Apremont for a twenty-four hour rest. While here Lieutenant Loos was attached to the Company, and the company moved back to Sommerance occupying the right flank of the Regimental sector. Shortly afterwards Lieutenant Lester Rumble was assigned to the company and took command.

On the evening of October 17th, the First and Second Battalions moved up to the front positions, relieving the Third Battalion and a part of the 327th Infantry. During the night an order was received that the Regimental sector had been extended a kilometer further to the left. By 5 o'clock on the morning of the 18th, Captain Danforth, with "G" Company, had moved to the west and had covered the additional sector and connected up with the 163rd Brigade. The enemy planes flew low over our lines, directing artillery fire, and during the afternoon a great number of our planes came towards our front and several combats took place in mid-air. One enemy plane finally burst into flames and shot to the ground, followed by the aviator in a parachute. Another plane came down. These men were taken prisoners and after being interviewed, were sent to the Brigade P. C.

The First and Second Battalions occupied the front line positions for twenty-four hours on October 20th, October 23rd, October 26th, and October 29th, while the Third Battalion occupied the same position on October 19th, October 21st, October 24th and October 27th. On October 17th Capt. Blandy B. Clarkson, who had been commanding the Third Battalion and who had been sick for some time, was evacuated and Capt. C. N. Sisson assumed command. During the period the First and Second Battalions were occupying the front, companies were disposed from left to right as follows:

"G" "H" "A" "C" "E" "F" "D" "B"

The right of our line was gradually drawn back to connect with the 42nd Division, which failed to advance from October 14th to November 1st, and protect our own flank. During the balance of the month of October, the Regiment was ordered to advance with the 42nd Division as soon as it came abreast, and the organization was at all times ready to do so. It was also the Regiment's mission to protect the right flank of the 163rd Brigade in any advance that it might make. Strong patrols nightly worked well to our front, improving and exploiting our positions, preparatory to a general advance. Special efforts were made towards capturing woods known as "1," "2," "3," "7" and "5" to our front, and artillery fire was frequently Dugouts of the Boche in Cornay, France. From these dugouts Captain Sisson, with other officers and men of the 3rd Battalion, took 115 prisoners on the night of October 9, 1918. After this the Boche counter-attacked the village, captured a company of another regiment and held the village until it was retaken by the 3rd Battalion on the 10th.

placed on these woods and aided considerably the Infantry in this operation. All our efforts, however, were rendered of little value by reason of the exposed right flank which allowed the enemy to constantly harass these efforts from the east. One patrol, led by Lieutenant Francis W. Mason of "A" Company, worked well into the woods to the north and drove out several machine guns and obtained valuable information. The patrol suffered heavily and the leader himself was badly wounded. These operations were carried on with difficulty by reason of the presence of the enemy planes over our lines. They flew low, attacked our front line with machine gun fire and directed enemy artillery fire.

The Regimental P. C. remained in the cellar at Sommerance, and Lieutenant-Colonel Wetherill directed the operations of the Regiment. The Supply Company performed its work making numerous trips to the front under most trying circumstances, and Captain Catchings Therrel, who had been with division headquarters for some time past, was most energetic in getting extra supplies to Sommerance. The Regimental Infirmary was situated a short distance from the Regimental P. C. and Capt. Davis W. Goldstein, who had taken the place of Capt. H. A. Freund, who had been wounded at Fleville, with his personnel did invaluable work in aiding and comforting the wounded and sick. Chaplain Daniel Smart of our Second Battalion was killed shortly after the attack at Sommerance had been made, as was Mr. Barker, a Red Cross worker who had done invaluable service with our Regiment.

The Regiment had been actively engaged night and day since the night of October 6th. The mental and physical strain had been indeed great and the constant rain with resulting mud and shell holes filled with water added greatly to the hardship of the troops. The men and officers patiently and with good spirits stuck to their posts while the wearing-out process continued to take its toll. The runners of the various units of the Regiment had bravely and efficiently performed their most difficult and dangerous task.

The return of the Battalions to Brigade Reserve afforded a slight respite. Through the efforts of General Lindsey, bathing facilities as if by magic sprung up from the shell-wrecked ruins of Sommerance. Here in close proximity to the Regimental P. C. was a place where the men could be and were "dried out, warmed up, fed up, slept, reclothed and re-equipped." The Regiment showed its appreciation of what its Brigade Commander had done by taking all the cures above mentioned without any evil effect.

On the night of October 29th, Major Boyle was evacuated and Captain Guy C. Lewis, of Company D, assumed command of the 1st Battalion. The Regiment had lost a considerable number in the St. Mihiel operations, and on October 6th had a total strength of 89 officers and 2,819 men. During the past days it had lost in killed, 9 officers and 171 men, and wounded by shell or machine gun fire, 17 officers and 722 men, making a total of casualties of 26 officers and 931 men. This is about 30 per cent. of the Regiment. In addition quite a number had been gassed and evacuated by reason of sickness. Toward the end, a few replacements joined the Regiment.

On the night of October 30th-31st, the 82nd Division was relieved by the 80th Division, and on this night the Third Battalion withdrew from the front. The First and Second Battalions remained in their positions on the front line and acted as a screen while the balance of the 164th Brigade was being relieved and were particularly charged with the duty of preventing hostile patrols entering our line or of the enemy obtaining information that the relief was in progress. It was about 1 A. M. November 1st when the First and Second Battalions started back over the roads, which about three weeks before, had seen them go forward in what was to be their final fight; a struggle in which the Regiment had driven the Germans back and wore them out so that on the following morning, the enemy started on its last retreat. As the Battalion marched through Fleville, the guns of many Divisions were roaring forth along the entire front a deep and heavy barrage. The guns of all calibres rejoicing in their efforts, foretold in tones of thunder the coming of the end. A curtain of fire had indeed fallen upon the last act of the war.

CHAPTER VII.

About 4 A. M. November 1st, the Regiment reached an old German rest camp, Camp De Bouzon, near Varennes, where hot food and billets were waiting and a bath house with hot and cold water was in operation. Here the Regiment remained till 4 A. M. November 2nd, at which time they again took up the march, proceeding to a French Camp, Florent, in the Argonne near St. Minehould, arriving there about 2 P. M. the same day. On the morning of November 4th the Regiment embussed at Florent and started south to a new area arriving at Maxey Sur Vaise about midnight. On November 5th the Second and Third Battalions moved to Montigny and Burey, Regimental Headquarters and the First Battalion remaining at Maxey. While there, seven day leaves to leave areas were granted to limited numbers; this practice continuing from that time on until practically every man in the Regiment had had a seven-day leave and a large proportion leaves of three-day duration. Also replacements began to arrive and regular drill schedules were again taken up.

On November 10th the Regiment started hiking to another area by easy stages arriving in this new area on November 18th, having billeted from one to several days in various towns en route. It was on the morning of November 11th while passing through Neufchateau that official news of the Armistice was received. Anyone who expected wild demonstrations would have been sadly disappointed. However, that night at Harreville, where the Regiment billeted for the night, wild enthusiasm was evidenced by the natives and Vin Blanc was everywhere in evidence.

Our new Area was near Dijon, in the Haute Soane Area, Argilliers being Regimental Headquarters with the battalions in the nearby towns of Larret, Pierrecourt, Frettes, Tornay, Gilley and Genevriers. The companies were about recruited up now and a course of intensive training was again started, maneuvers being the main line worked on. In January we received orders to prepare for return to America and a wave of happiness spread over the Regiment which gradually died down as every two weeks our time of departure was again postponed.

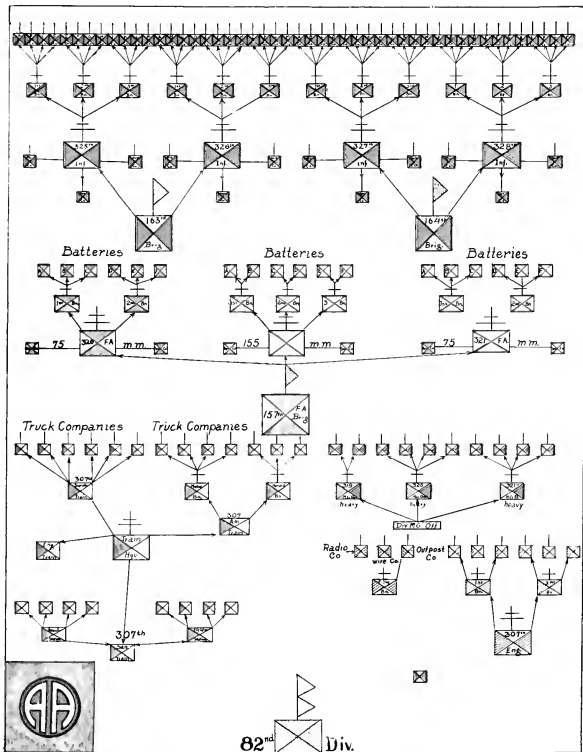

Finally, however, definite orders were received and on February 27th and 28th, the Regiment entrained at Champlitte for the Bordeaux area. Although it was a long tiresome trip the men were all in high spirits and the American transportation that we were lucky enough to draw was much more comfortable than the French "8-40's."

Our new area was the country around St. Selve, about 25 miles from Bordeaux and was, all told, much more comfortable than any area we had previously occupied. The time was devoted to school work, a little drilling and range work, and lots of athletics. Battalion, Regimental and Division baseball leagues were organized and our Regiment won the hotly contested division championship, the final game being the deciding one. In spite of everything that could be done the time passed very slowly and we all impatiently awaited orders to proceed to the Bordeaux embarkation camp.

These orders arrived the latter part of April and the Regiment proceeded by marching to the Camp and went through the frantic process of preparing the final paperwork and completely "decooterizing," sterilizing and equipping for the trip home.

The Valley of the Aire River, near Chatel Chehery, across which the 1st Battalion attacked October 7, 1918. This picture was taken from Hill 223.

The above cut shows the formation of a Division of the United States Army during the Great War.

On May 8th Regimental Headquarters and Headquarters Company sailed on the U. S. S. Sierra, the First and Second Battalions following the next day on the U. S. S. Scranton and the Third Battalion, Machine Gun and Supply Companies sailed on the 11th on the U. S. S. Ohioan. We landed in New York harbor May 20th to 22nd and proceeded to Camp Merritt for demobilization. For some unknown reason Regimental Headquarters and Headquarters Company were sent to Mills, throwing all the Regimental record work necessary at Merritt on the Battalion Headquarters.

On May 25th the various camp detachments began moving out and by the end of the month practically all the men were out of the service. All company property and records were consolidated and turned in at Camp Upton.

Our demobilization was attended with a feeling of considerable regret over the separation from our comrades with whom for nearly two years we had daily worked, played and lived and with whom we had played a part in the greatest drama of the ages. As long as we live and as often as two or more of us meet we shall always delight in recounting the glorious deeds of our Regiment, of which we are justly proud.

HEADQUARTERS 82ND DIVISION, AMERICAN E. F., FRANCE.

MEMORANDUM NO. 14.

25 January, 1919.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Office of the Chief of Staff.

France, 20 January, 1919.

FROM: Chief of Staff.

TO: Commanding General, 82nd Division.

SUBJECT: Operations of the 82nd Div., in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive.

1. Having reference to your letter dated January 12, 1919, to the Commanding General, 5th Corps, American E. F., re operations of the 82nd Division in the Meuse-Argonne Battle, I am directed by the Commander-in-Chief to inform you that the work of your Division was carefully considered in connections with the citation Orders. The Commander-in-Chief is thoroughly conversant with the remarkable work of the 82nd Division during the period from October 6th to October 31st. However, he has decided that no further orders of citation be published by these Headquarters.

2. For your information he desires me to state that if the practice of citing divisions had been continued, the 82nd Division would have been included in orders among those divisions which surpassed the uniform excellence of performance obtained by most of our divisions in the Meuse-Argonne Offensive.

JAMES W. McANDREW.

"Office of the C. in C., A. E. F., Sept. 15, 1918.

Major General Hunter Liggett,
Commanding First Army Corps, France.

Please accept my sincere congratulations on the successful and important part taken by the officers and men of the First Corps in the first offensive of the First American Army on September twelfth and thirteenth. The courageous dash and vigor of our troops has thrilled our countrymen and evoked the enthusiasm of our Allies. Please convey to your command my heartfelt appreciation of their splendid work. I am proud of you all.

PERSHING."

2. The Commanding General congratulates the officers and men of the Division upon their successful work and the splendid spirit in which it was accomplished. The assistance they rendered to our Divisions seriously engaged on the left was most important.

3. This order will be read to all organizations upon its receipt.

The following letter from the Commander-in-Chief is a source of gratification to the Division Commander as he knows it will be to all the officers and men of the Division, and is published for the information of the Command:

"AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
OFFICE OF THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

France, February 19, 1919.

Major General George B. Duncan,
Commanding 82nd Division, A. E. F.

My Dear General Duncan:

It gives me a great deal of pleasure to extend to you and the officers and men of the 32nd Division my compliments upon their excellent appearance at the inspection and review on February 11th near Prauthoy. It was gratifying to see your troops in such good physical shape, but still more so to know that the moral tone of all ranks is so high. It is hoped that this will continue even after their return to civil life.

Your Division is to be congratulated on its record in France. At the end of June, it was placed in a quiet sector of the French Line to release veteran divisions for the battle. From the 12th to 16th of September it took part in the first American offensive at St. Mihiel, attacking and occupying Norroy and the heights north and west of Vandieres. In this operation it advanced 5 kilometers. In the Meuse-Argonne Offensive the Division attacked on October 7th and was engaged almost continuously for twenty-five days. Attacking across the river Aire it assisted the 28th and 77th Divisions to advance, and on October 9th captured Cornay. On October 16th the strong position of Hill 132 was captured and the towns of St. Juvin and Marcq were captured, making a total advance of 12 kilometers.

The officers and men of your Division may proudly carry home with them the gratitude of the allies with whom they fought and the pride of their fellows throughout our forces.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. PERSHING."

GENERAL ORDERS

NO. 18

1. The Commanding General is proud to announce to the Division that the 1st and 3rd Battalion of the 328th Infantry, Lt. Col. Richard Wetherill commanding, on the afternoon of September 15th, advanced 2 kilometers in the face of very heavy artillery, rifle and machine gun fire, took and occupied the ridge north of Vandieres and, in spite of determined resistance, established themselves on and held the ridge. The splendid conduct of these two Battalions furnishes an example the Division will strive to follow when upon other fields we shall have again the privilege of facing the enemy.

1. The following telegrams have been received and are published for the information of all concerned:

"General John J. Pershing, American Expeditionary Forces, France. Accept my warmest congratulations on the brilliant achievements of the army under your command. The boys have done what we expected of them and done it in the ways we most admire. We are deeply proud of them and of their Chief. Please convey to all concerned my grateful and affectionate thanks. Signed Woodrow Wilson."

"General Pershing, Headquarters American Expeditionary Forces. All ranks of the British Armies in France welcome with unbounded admiration and pleasure the victory which has attended the initial offensive of the great American Army which is under your personal command. I beg you to accept and to convey to all ranks my best congratulations and those of all ranks of the British Armies under my command. Signed Haig."

32d Army Corps.

"Hq. 32d Army Corps, July 3, 1918.

GENERAL ORDER NO. 134.

Officers, Non-commissioned Officers and Privates of the French and American Armies under my command.

One hundred and fifty years ago, with a generous hand, a handful of Frenchmen crossed the Atlantic to fight side by side with the bold Americans, striving for their independence.

Out of this fight was born a great Republic, the United States of America, the hardy children of which have astonished the world by their overflowing activity, their vigor, their ingenious inventions, and their great work.

This great people have lived freely in their liberty. No one has threatened them, but when they saw our mother country invaded and ignominiously spoiled by the vast hordes of an ambitious Emperor, deprived of scruples, and dominated by a proud military caste, knowing only power, they remembered the days which have passed. Hearing out the voices of their hearts, they came to our support; bringing with them all their resources, their wealth, their institutions, and their blood, for the defense of our Motherland, and for the defense of every nation fighting for liberty.

Henceforth, throughout the civilized world, "Independence Day" will be a festival of liberty, because the great American people shall have assured the liberty of the civilized world.

Today, I am proud to salute your colors, floating beside our well beloved flag.

Commanding General, 32d Army Corps,

Signed PASSAGA."

GENERAL ORDERS

Pursuant to telegraphic instructions from G. H. Q., the 82nd Division, upon the establishment of its Headquarters in the Le Mans Area, is relieved from duty with this Army.

Beginning August 15, 1918, the 82nd Division relieved the 2d Division in the Marbache Sector astride the Moselle River. While occupying this sector as a part of the I Army Corps, A. E. F., the division was transferred from the command of the VIII French Army to that of the First Army, A. E. F., at 4:00 P. M., of August 30, 1918.

The 82d Division participated in the following operations of the First Army:

ST. MIHIEL OPERATION.

Division held the right of the line from Port-sur-Seille to the Meuse River and attacked West of that river in conjunction with the 90th Division. The Division captured and occupied Norroy and the ridge North and West of Vandieres.

MEUSE-ARGONNE OPERATION.

The Division was in Army and Corps Reserve from September 26th to October 6th. On the night of October 6-7, the Division, less one infantry brigade, entered the line on the I Corps front between the 1st and 28th Divisions along the Aire River facing Cornay. Early October 7th, the division attacked the Northwest flank of the Argonne, capturing Hills 180 and 223, and subsequently the high ground to the West, thus materially assisting in the clearing of the Argonne.

During the period October 10th to 31st, the Division changed direction to the North, advanced astride of the Aire River to the general line East of St. Juvin, participated in the general attack of October 14th and several local attacks against Champigneulle and the hostile defences East of that town. The Division was relieved from the front line and passed into I Corps Reserve October 30th and 31st.

The Army Commander takes this occasion to express his appreciation of the services of the 82nd Division while a part of the combat forces of this Army, and wishes it God speed upon the final phase of its participation in the activities of the American Expeditionary Forces.

FREDERICK PALMER, IN COLLIER'S WEEKLY, MARCH 29, 1919

"If the salient which the 1st made had not been spread, then the 1st had simply made a thrust into the lion's jaw. If the salient were sufficiently spread, then the lion's jaws were dislocated. As the 28th alone was not equal to that task, the 82d Division, under Duncan, a sound, cool soldier trained in the school of the 1st, was put in on the 6th as a link between the 1st and the 28th (which it was later to relieve) with the mission of making a rush worthy of the company it kept across the river bottoms, to take some particularly sheer and difficult heights on the Argonne Forest side of the valley which commanded the zone of the 1st and impeded ultimate progress of the 77th in the Forest. The 82d was inexperienced in battle, but our command had learned that the National Army divisions never lacked drive, and this one, the "all-America" division, seemed to feel that its honor was bound up with that of all the draft men in the United States.

"Having failed to check the thrust of the 1st, the next step for the Germans was to try to check this thrust. They did not depend upon machine guns and artillery on the ridges alone, but brought both down on to the river bottom to wait for our infantry as it came upon rising ground. Field guns attached to battalions fired at point-blank range. In that case the thing to do was to take the guns; and the 82d took them.

"In places the men could ford the Aire. In other places they had to build bridges. They had six days of repeated charges. Not every charge went home. Some that went home did not stick. Twice they took the village of Cornay and twice they had to retire in face of counterattacks, but night found them in each instance farther advanced. They climbed up the ridge walls around bowlders and through thickets to find that the German machine gunners had some unexpected angle of fire that required further consideration of the situation. They were gassed and shelled continually, of course. Take it for granted that everybody in front was gassed and shelled throughout the battle.

"One battalion of the 82nd lost all but 190 men. In one batch of 300 prisoners that the 82d took every man was a machine gunner or an artilleryman, and a large percentage of these were veteran noncommissioned officers of a type that usually do not bother to surrender while they have a cartridge left. The 82d was in the sector twenty-five days. Its casualties were 6,700, including a thousand killed. At one time it was down to 4,500 men fit for duty on its morning reports. General Duncan established a divisional rest camp for the tired men out of range of the shells, and his paternal care and the extraordinary tenacity of the men kept the division going at a time when we needed every man we could muster at the front.

"At the end of the second of those first six days the 82nd had so far cleared the road for the 77th that it took a new lease of life in a single bound of eight kilometers

Hill 223, Chatel Chery, France, taken by the 1st Battalion October 7, 1918, after advancing across the valley of the Aire River, a distance of 3 kilometers under a heavy Boche barrage and under a heavy machine gun fire from this Hill. On the afternoon of the 7th the Boche attacked this Hill with about 250 men, but were driven off, leaving behind about forty of their dead. From this Hill on October 8th the One Pounder Platoon of the Regiment directed fire on the hill attacked by the 2nd Battalion, being the only artillery support given the 2nd Battalion on that morning.

through the Argonne Forest. At the end of the sixth day the 32d had reached the Kriemhilde Stellung itself, where it got the kind of information from the Germans which was a sufficient hint to our army command that the 32d had better pause in its eager course of victory. On the other side of Grand Pré, the French Fourth Army could now bulge out toward the Bourgogne Forest and the 77th crossed the river and entered Grand Pré and Saint-Juvin quite handily. Now, thanks to the gallantry of the 32d, all that stretch of river bottom called the Grand Pré gap was ours, while ahead there looked down upon us still the final summits of the whale-back which we must attain before we could strike downhill toward the German lines of communication.

"The drive of these two divisions and of the 32d, after the 1st had made the wedge, with the taking of the Grand Pré gap, stand out sensationally in their tactical importance above the ruck of battle which was raging in repeated attacks all the way to the Meuse River; and the divisions on our right toward the Meuse, whose equally persistent pressure was equally important in the whole plan, suffered as much as those on the left, if not more. It was the viciously brave work of the veteran regular 3d on its flank, under Major General Beaumont Buck, and later under Brigadier General Preston Brown, which permitted the success of the 32d."

ARTHUR PAGE IN JUNE, 1919, "WORLD'S WORK."

"On the 28th of September the two wings of the army made progress and on the first of October the centre made a small gain. These might be considered the exploitation of the gains of the first day's attack. In the meanwhile every one was working feverishly to get ready for another general attack on the morning of October 4th. The 79th and the 37th Divisions which had had the hardest time, were replaced by the veteran 32nd and 1st.

"On the 4th of October came the first general attack all along the line after the initial rush. It gained, though not largely, at every point, but particularly it pushed forward up the Aire Valley along the eastern edge of the Argonne. The French had, in the meanwhile, been pushing up on their side, following the plan of forcing the Germans out of the Forest without pushing them out by direct attack. By the night of the 4th of October the American line was as far north as Fléville on the flank of the Forest of Argonne. But the Germans, although threatened with being cut off, as at Montfaucon, stuck to their exposed position and kept their artillery working on our exposed flank. To cure this situation the 32nd Division, which had relieved the 23th, attacked due west on the morning of the 7th. What they did was one of the extraordinary feats of the whole battle. They crossed the Aire River Valley, climbed the hills 300 feet high on the other side and by the night of the 8th had pushed the Germans off the dominating points. To pass a flat valley under artillery and machine gun fire, capture a strongly defended town (Châtel Chehery) get across a river and up wooded heights on the other side in the face of machine guns is a matter not to be lightly undertaken. The men of the 82nd can with confidence go home and discuss war with the remnants of those who went up Lookout Mountain in 1863, and if on the one hand the heights above the Aire are not as high as Lookout Mountain, on the other, machine guns are much harder to face than single shot rifles.

“The more the 47 days of the Argonne-Meuse is studied the more grateful the American public must become to General Pershing, his staff, and the officers and men of the American Army, and the more fixed should become the public resolution never again to make an American general take the moral responsibility of facing such a task with an army “hurriedly raised and hastily trained” and never again to send our citizens into battle in which all the advantages that come from proper training are with the enemy.

“The great decisions of Pershing and his staff to train for open warfare, to push the fighting whether ready or not, the ability to make a million men into an army that could function without fatal blunders and fight to victory—these things are as great in the annals of the nation as the courage of our men, and more remarkable for our men have always been courageous but our leadership has not always been either good or successful.”

PLANS OF BATTLE

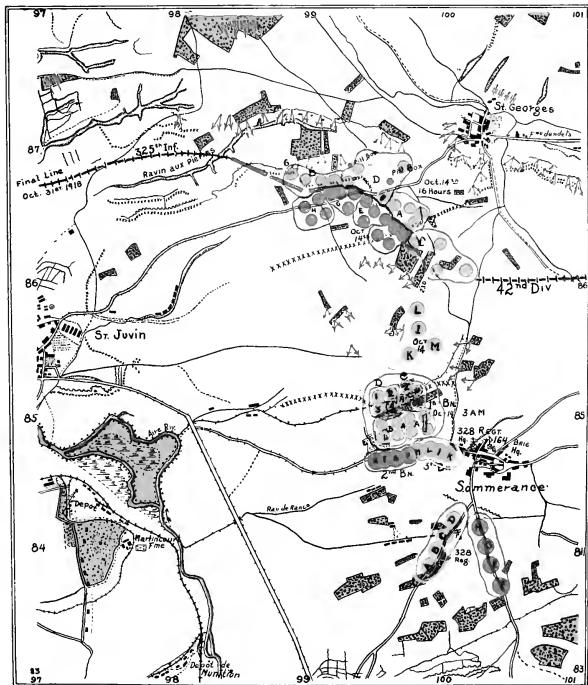

Oct. 7th, 1st Battalion occupies IIII 223 at 1 P. M. Oct. 8th, 2nd Battalion reaches railroad objective, west of IIII 223, at 5:20 P. M. 3rd Battalion captures Cornay at 4 P. M.
